

High-Protein Blueberry & Peanut Butter Chia Pudding

This high-protein blueberry and peanut butter chia pudding is a perfect make-ahead breakfast packed with fiber and protein to keep you energized throughout the day. Chia seeds soak up the blended almond milk and blueberries overnight, creating a creamy pudding that's layered for a peanut butter-and-jelly effect.

Ingredients

3 cups unsweetened almond milk

2½ cups blueberries, divided

2 tablespoons plain, unsweetened, plant-based protein powder

¾ cup chia seeds

2 tablespoons pure maple syrup plus 1 teaspoon, divided

1¾ teaspoons vanilla extract, divided

¼ teaspoon salt

¾ cup nonfat plain strained (Greek-style) yogurt

⅓ cup smooth natural peanut butter

Directions

Step 1

Process 3 cups almond milk, 2 cups blueberries and 2 tablespoons protein powder in a blender until smooth, about 30 seconds. Transfer to a medium bowl; whisk in ¾ cup chia seeds, 2 tablespoons maple syrup, 1 teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon salt until well combined. Cover and refrigerate until thickened, at least 12 hours.

Step 2

In a small bowl, stir $\frac{3}{4}$ cup yogurt, $\frac{1}{3}$ cup peanut butter and the remaining 1 teaspoon maple syrup and $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon vanilla together until smooth. Cover and refrigerate until ready to use.

Step 3

Spoon 1 cup of blueberry chia pudding into each of 4 jars or small bowls. Spread 2 tablespoons peanut butter mixture over each pudding. Top the puddings evenly with the remaining $\frac{1}{2}$ cup blueberries.

To make ahead

Prepare pudding (Step 1); refrigerate, covered, for up to 3 days. Refrigerate assembled jars for up to 3 days.

Frequently Asked Questions

What other fruit can I use?

Raspberries, blackberries, strawberries and even cherries are all great alternatives to blueberries in this chia pudding.

Can I use a different type of milk?

Any milk, dairy or nondairy, will work well here. If you are looking to boost the protein content even more, soy milk and cow's milk are good alternatives. Opt for unsweetened versions of whatever milk you choose to avoid excess added sugars.

What can I use instead of peanut butter?

Sunbutter (made from sunflower seeds) or tahini (made from sesame seeds) can be used in place of the peanut butter.
